«Beverly (Mass.). The writer's mother (Mrs.Louisa Loring) intended to send the enclosed ten dollars for her subscription to the Liberty Bell, "but has been prevented by a serious illness from which she has been suffering for the last fortnight..." The writer, believing that the worst has passed, hopes, if her mother continues to improve, to come to Boston and assist at the fair during the first two or three days. The writer gives information about certain articles connected with the fair. Mattie Griffith was to stay with the Lorings at their town house, and the writer trusts that the addressee will be able [illegible] find some other place where she can stay.

«Boston» Concerned with a slave-boy Martin, who was thrown upon the care of the writer. A Mr. G. Soward of the Hopedale Community offered to adopt him andmake him a member of the community. Last summer Martin went to Hopedale. Mr. Soward has informed the writer that "Martin exerts an unfavorable influence & sets a bad example to their children – that they are unwilling he should remain there longer." The writer himself fears that "his moral habits are in some way injured." Requests the addressee to ascertain whether he could obtain for Martin a seaman's apprenticeship or the like on board a whaling or other vessel of N[illegible]edford.

To the Editor of the Liberator

«Boston» The writer's attention has been called to an article in the Liberator of Nov. 25, entitled "New notions about prayer," which "purports to describe" what the writer said and did in relation to a note sent by George Latimer to the churches in the city, requesting prayers in his behalf: "As the article is essentially false in one important point, & unfair in its general tone," the writer wishes to use the columns of the Liberator to make the necessary corrections. A reported conversation which the writer had with a parishioner was also an "unchristian misrepresentation."

The article in question wa[illegible]gned M.S.C. (Maria Weston Chapman). S.K. Lothrop was pastor of the Brattle Street Church, Boston.

To Henry Grafton Chapman

[Alton, Ill.] The writer acknowledges the check sent to Mrs. Elijah P. Lovejoy. She has one child two years old next March and "is expecting to give birth to another during the winter, whether she survives it I think very doubtful." She is now with her mother in St. Charles, Mo. The writer believes that his brother "has done more by his death, than by living and unopposed he could have done in a century." Trusts that the Seton Observer will be re-established at this place before six months. Some brethren think it better that it should be printed in Cincinnati for the present. The writer rejoices that "there is a d[illegible]sition in your city to assist us." Hopes that the addres[illegible]ill inform him how much they can count on, "for be assure[illegible]sir, if funds can be had, the

To Mrs. Maria (Weston) Chapman

[Cambridge, Mass.] The writer does not want her name to appear as a director of the Anti-Slavery fair, because she would not be able to do her part, "as I was so busy preparing for the little reformer we are expecting to receive ..." The writer will ask Mrs. Longfellow for her aid. Encloses a contribution toward decorating the hall. She can promise a poem from James (Russell Lowell) for the Liberty Bell and perhaps some verses of her own.
